THOUGHTS on HYPOCRISY.

IT has been generally obſerved, that Men of ſtrict Candour appear to others what they are in themſelves, nor ever claim a Character that is not notoriouſly their Due: Diſguiſes being ſeldom uſed where Hypocriſy or Guilt do not render them needful. Of this the World is ſo ſenſible, the Pretence to extraordinary Merit of any Kind, ads a Suſpicion of ſome extraordinary Want of ſo ious a Covering: It being now much more diffi- to impoſe upon Mankind, than when Ignorance Superſtition deſeated the Uſe of Natural Reaſon, an implicit Obedience to a few arbitrary Rules thought ſufficient, without the Liberal Aid ari- from Reading and Reflection. For the Removal ul'gar Prejudices, and the Increaſe of Learning ughout this Land, muſt be attributed, in a great ree, to the Freedom that ſo eminently diſtinguiſhes reſent Time from paſt Ages.

s the moſt ſanguine Events, when traced to their inal Sources, have been owing to Mens being ght what they were not; and almoſt every leſſer may be aſſigned to the ſame Cauſe; the Private intereſted Views of ſome, and the ridiculous Fol- f others, afford abundant Inſtances of the Danger lieving Men what they profeſs themſelves, where Intereſts or Paſſions are concern'd.

What helps to detect the artful Diſguiſes of Impo- of any Kind, is their never being content with Character whatever, but the Reverſe of what merit.

Coward has ever been more remarkable for the ount of his martial Exploits, and dangerous Ren- ters, than a Man of try'd Valour; for, while ne is ſounding his own Fame to all he comes near, other is ſatisfied with the unaſſiſted Advances of Character; with this Advantage, that whereas and Enquiry is ſure to rob the former of the m he is ſo fond of, the latter will be certain to Gainer by a cloſe Scrutiny into his Conduct.

nother Example of this Truth is obſervable in ns who accuſtom themſelves to the ſtupid, but too lent Practice, of Habitual Swearing; for tho' frequent Appeals to the Deity are deſign'd (if are deſign'd at all) to give a Sanction to what are brought to confirm, yet they are rather the s of Falſhood than of Truth; and thoſe who by unaccountable Folly uſe the greateſt Name by of ſtrengthening what they aſſert, of all Men gain aſt Belief.

en of the moſt Immoral Conduct often profeſs a Adherence to every Precept of Morality; and it equently ſeen, that Perſons whoſe Lives are a al to the Chriſtian Name, make an outward Zeal hriſtianity the Means of perpetrating the moſt ing Violations of all Laws Human and Divine: t often happens, that the higher their Pretences arried, the more it is in their Power to abuſe the ulity of thoſe they deceive.

ſguiſes of this Kind have had ſuch fatal Conſe- ces, by driving Men, who have neither Capacity atience to diſtinguiſh between true Virtue and unterfeit, into Libertiniſm, and a general Con- of Religion, that it has lately been diſputed, ther the World has been bettered by Revelation!

has been long obſerved of the Fair Sex, that ſhe ays the ſtrongeſt Claim to exemplary Modeſty, t ſafely be taken at her Word; ſo that a Wo- of real Virtue has no Means left to gain the n ſhe merits, but a ſteady Perſeverance, and a t Diffidence of her own Abilities: With theſe, ill ſcarcely fail to gain, in ſome Meaſure, at the Regard ſhe deſerves; while thoſe who, ing a contrary Conduct, vainly hope to appear the ſame Advantage, add to their Guilt of not ing Eſteem, the Blame of attempting to obtain eſtly.

among all the Diſguiſes that curſe Society, none pernicious, tho' none more common, than that tended Friend; for, by this, the moſt perfidious nies have been committed, before Miſchief has ſuſpected. The great Misfortune in this Caſe is, that the beſt Men are moſt eaſily impoſed upon; which may be attributed to the Unwillingneſs wherewith a Man of an honeſt Heart and open Conduct can be induced to believe thoſe his Enemies, who, beſides their continual Declarations of Friendſhip, have numerous Reaſons to unite them to his Intereſts. Hence the Succeſs of Men of Deſign and Intrigue is more commonly owing to the Honour and generous Principles of thoſe they injure, than to their own Schemes; as the latter can have no Effect upon Men, who, from a Knowledge of their own Perfidy, are taught to think others as inſincere as themſelves. From this, in private Life, ariſes the Merit of thoſe, who, by a happy Penetration into the Miſchiefs intended others, become the Means of reſcuing the Honeſt and Unwary from thoſe who ſtudy to betray them.

The ſame Principles that make falſe Friends in Affairs between private Men, produce them between Men of Ambition and the Publick; Pretences to a Love of Liberty, and of an earneſt Affection for our Country, as they are more intereſting than any others, are apt to call a more general Attention from the People, and, conſequently, the greater Difficulty attends their Detection; for as on Occaſions of this Nature, few among the Multitude can be proper Judges of the Motives and Deſigns of thoſe who expreſs ſuch Ardour for their Happineſs, nothing leſs than Demonſtration can convince them ſuch ſeemingly publick-ſpirited Declararations ariſe merely from ſelf-intereſted Views, founded upon the certain Ruin and Deſtruction of thoſe they are ſaid to be calculated to ſerve: For which End, nothing has been found of ſo certain, tho' often, but ſlow Effect, as a mild Oppoſition to theſe Deceivers, and the Aſſiſtance which Time is ſure to lend in diſpelling the Miſt they may for ſome time caſt over the Eyes of the People. In our own Time, we have been ſo fortunate in this reſpect, that ſome Gentlemen who pretended to riſe mighily in the Cauſe of Liberty, from Piques of their own, had proceeded but a ſhort Way in their Journey to Patriotiſm, before they openly betray'd the Truſt and Confidence that had been repoſed in them, ſpared none in the wild Fury of their Reſentment, and thereby delivered the People from the Slavery of any future Attention to their Conduct: —— In every Inſtance, the preſent Advocates for Confuſion have prov'd themſelves Hypocrites: And, as ſuch, are now univerſally deſpiſed. There was, indeed, a Time when, by ſome impartial Men, they were miſtaken for the Friends of their Country; but they have lately ſo fully explained their Motives for uſing the Cry of Liberty, when no Privilege of the Subject has been invaded, that in vain may they call themſelves the Patriots of the People, ſince they are now the open Advocates for the Nations Foes.
